A Brief History

A fabulous fancy

In the 1740s, Benjamin Hyett designed a flamboyant pleasure garden to entertain guests at Painswick House. The garden was a country gentleman's experimental creation, scattered with an eclectic array of buildings.

The garden is a confection of horticultural and architectural delights to draw the eye. Rather than another orderly flower garden, Hyett created a tranquil haven, ripe for pleasure and romance.

Since 1984, the garden has been restored to its original rococo glory, after being redesigned with changing fashions and then eventually abandoned to woodland. The garden is now run and maintained as an independent registered charity.

The garden was depicted in glorious detail by artist Thomas Robins in 1748. This painting became the blueprint for its restoration.

Visit Duration and Accessibility

Recommended Visit Duration

We recommend allowing 2–3 hours for your visit. This allows time to explore the garden, perhaps enjoy a guided tour, visit the café, or browse the shop.

Accessibility

The garden itself was built in a hidden valley almost 300 years ago. Paths are both steep and uneven and we do not recommend using a wheelchair or mobility scooter in the garden due to its difficult terrain.

Paths: Most main paths are gravel or grass. Most slopes will be challenging for manual wheelchairs and those with limited mobility.

Facilities: Accessible toilets are located near the entrance and close to the café. The garden is not suitable for motorised scooters. Accessibility map available.

For information visit our website, or for more detailed information please call 01452 813204 – we'll be glad to help.
